A transitive verb is a verb that can take a direct object. To understand sentence construction, it helps if you know a little about three types of verb: linking, intransitive and transitive. This person or thing is known as the direct object of the verb. A verb is transitive if it needs a direct object. What is an intransitive verb? A complete sentence consists of a subject and a predicate. A verb can be described as transitive or intransitive based on whether it requires an object to express a complete thought or not.

Now let's look at some verbs that have both meanings intransitive and transitive. The verbs 'to eat, to see, to touch, to kiss, to love, to take, to grab, to hug, to study, to chase', for example, are all transitive because they answer the question 'who/what?'. Two of the most basic verb classifications are transitive and intransitive.

Transitive verbs can be categorized into two types: monotransitive and ditransitive. Monotransitive verbs are verbs that require exactly one object. In English there is no way to tell whether a verb is transitive or intransitive simply by looking at it, so, instead, you need to look at how it. The part of the sentence that we will discuss today is the predicate. Transitive and intransitive Verbs Test Topics: What is a verb?
